AMUSEMENTS.

"The Sign of the Cross." Wilson Barrett's four-act drama, "The Sign of the Cross," was presented to an appreciative audience at English's last

The play is well known, having been here twice before. It tells the story of the persecution and the suffering of the Christians under the bloodthirsty rule of Nero. By way of juxtaposition it shows the life of the enervated, oversatiated, glutted Roman and that of their persecuted victims, the humble but high-spirited Christians. Intermingled in these historic facts is a story of love of the Roman prefect for a pure, beautiful Christian girl, whom he cannot save because she would not renounce her faith, and with whom, rather than give her up, he enters the arena.

The play has made a pronounced hit from London to the Golden Horn. People have come to see it that would never go to a theater under ordinary circumstances, not even when better plays are given. "The Sign of the Cross' was written by a man who has very pronounced ideas on his subject. It has a score of beautiful scenes in which high and pure thoughts find expression in a truly artistic way, but it also has severe defects, triviality and in one instance direct vulgarity. The torturing of the boy Stephanus in an adjoining room, whence the public hears pitiful, agonizing cries, is an artistic sin that cannot be denounced too severely. Such a thing should have been omitted in a play that is striving for human and high ideals. Sardou in his play "La Tosca," has made precisely the same mis-take in the scene where Marion is tortured while La Tosca is compelled to listen to his cries and moanings. Such scenes overstep the line of the dramatically admissible. In other respects the play deserves widespread attention, for its tastefully arranged scenery and the exquisite costumes. Both are got up with much skill and care and added much to the success of the work. Mr. Dalton, as Marcus Superbus, prefect of Rome, made a deep impression through manner of speech. He carried his part well, especially well in the scene between himself and Nero, where he vainly pleads for the life of the persecuted girl. Mr. Dalton has a figure well suited to represent this high-minded, true and noble character. Miss Lillie Thurlow, as Mercia, gave a beautiful and convincing picture of a pure, sweet Christian girl. She has a rare dramatic spirit and brought out the fine points of her part admirably. Another very success-ful artist was Miss Gertrude Boswell, as ephanus. The part is not very big, but portant and Miss Boswell, whose voice has a peculiar low and sympathetic tone, acted it with great sincerity. Her best work is when she steps out into the arena, but breaks down at the aspect of the fero-cious beasts. A shudder crept over the audience at that moment. Glabric (Mr. Henry N. Wenman) and Philodemus (Mr. Edgar C. Winsthorpe) are two gentlemen of lessure. They eat and drink well and indulge in the customary frivolities as much as their somewhat debilitated physiques permit. Aside from the use of wine Glabrio is addicted to semi-philosophical contemplations. Both parts were taken

The part of Nero is not well conceived and consequently lacked possibility in execution. The portrayal of Nero's bloodthirsty and cowardly character was not well done. Berenice, by Miss Agnes Scott, and Dacia, by Miss Vinnje Cassell, the two patrician women, gave a picture of gosn Roman times, which, if true, proves little humanity has changed. Another instance seems to verify this belief, for when, in the last act, ten people rush to the amphitheater to see the Christian victims butchered or burned as torches such action bears close resemblance to the people watching with delight the incineration of Johannes Huss, the burning of the witches n bygone days or the burning at the stake of a black man in our days. A scene of unsurpassing beauty comes in the last act when Mercia encourages poor Stephanus and later when Marcus Superbus declares his intention to become a Christian and to share the fate of the girl he loved more than his own life.

A veil was to make those who have never seen Papinta understand how wonderful and how beautiful are her myriad dances. A description of | the these dances can never do them full justice.

The Dramatic Mirror this week says: 'Eleanor Franklin has made for herself in plays, according to the critics, most admirably. Miss Franklin comes from Terre Haute, Ind., and removed, when sixteen years of age, to Kansas City, where she at once became prominent as a church choir singer and as a reader at entertainments for local charities. Her success there led her to come to New York last winter to enter a dramatic school. In January she appeared at a students' matinee at the Madisan-square Theater, and made, in a oneact play, a most pronounced success. After graduating from the school Miss Franklin returned to Kansas City and made her professional debut with the Woodward stock company, winning much praise from the local critics. For this season she was engaged to play Jeannette Gross in 'The Moth and the Flame' with the Kelcey-Shannon company. All the critics have praised her work and have emphasized especially the sympathetic feeling and sin-cere qualities of her acting."

Barn and Horses Burned.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. PARIS, Ill., Nov. 8 .- The barn of Thomas Hopkins was burned last night, with at least six horses. Nine horses were in th barn, but it is thought thieves stole three of them and then set fire to the barn. There were farm implements and crop products in the barn, causing a loss of $4,000 in all, with $2,400 insurance. Mr. Hopkins was awakened before daylight by the fire, but it had gained such progress that nothing could be done to save any of the contents. There were fresh tracks of horses from the barn, which leads to the belief that thieves set the > Durbin Announces His Candidacy. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

ANDERSON, Ind., Nov. 8 .- Col. W. T. Durbin will make his official announcement through the columns of the Herald to-morrow morning of his gubernatorial candidacy. He has been regarded as an avowed candidate, but this is the first time he has gone on record. He states that he stands a candidate for the Republican nomination and is willing to abide most cheerfully by its de-cision. Colonel Durbin's varied business in-terests have called him over the State a great deal and he has come in contact with people in every county. His position as chairman of the state executive committee for a six-year term and as the national committeeman since 1896 has brought him in closest contact with the leaders of his party, and he probably has as good a gen-eral acquainance as any man in the State, and this acquaintance is by no means confined to the political workers. For several years, before he came to Anderson, he covered the State as a commercial traveler and is remembered by many in that capacity. He feels satisfied that his personal acquaintance is such as to make his candidacy strong. He says that from now on he will be in the race for every point that can be gained. He adds, however, that he has made up his mind that he will maintain one point throughout all of the race. He will not attempt to lower any or ponent's colors by any personal attack or underhand means.

Three Men Overcome by Gas.
